How do we not drive ourselves crazy trying to figure out the intricacies of FCP and then try to write code for it. We have to start from the very beginning with the basics first like we started the rest of our careers from. Ok. And what is really hard to understand is that FCPX is a completely different animal when it comes to programming with it. I have no idea what the programmers know so I will just assume that they know something. But when it comes to us trying to code for them there is not much that we can do. We are trying to deal with something that we are not familiar with and with that we can only keep each other sane by asking questions. You can't possibly be a real expert in the nitty gritty of FCP when you can't even get it to run on a simple PC. I have never even seen a Mac PC. The original FCP X hasn't been on a Windows platform for years. The PC I am talking about is a simple Intel i5 CPU with 16gb RAM. It has a Radeon 6850. And I have to admit that I have not tried putting FCP on a Mac PC. The first time I tried to get FCP X to run was after I upgraded my Windows 10 PC from Windows 7 to Windows 10. And I had no idea what to do. Windows 10 blew away all my old programs. It has the familiar Windows programs like Explorer and more and it has a strong Office suite. But you have to buy a lot of new programs to use Windows 10. I started with the free version and then I tried the full version. It looked a little nicer than Windows 7 so I bought it. It worked. But it was too much for my simple PC. There are a lot of features in FCP X. FCP X is pretty much a hybrid of Final Cut Pro 7 and Avid Media Composer. So not only do you have to learn a lot of new programming that was done for the old OS but you also have to learn how to program for Avid. The UI is very similar to AVID. But it is not the same as what you are used to. Also it is for Mac OS users. The developers at EditShare to be fair have never released a version of FCP X for PC. They just created the "
