The following commands were used to download the XAMPP package. [root@vagrant ~]# wget [root@vagrant ~]# chmod +x xampp-win32. [root@vagrant ~]# ./xampp-win32. The default directory for all apache web-based applications is C:/xampp/htdocs/ The XAMPP package has been extracted to this directory. The next step involves creating web-based applications that will be accessible from the LAN or within the virtual machine. To do this: Create a web server. Create a host name Install a web-based application. Install the application to the host name. Create a web-based application Create web-based applications involves two main tools, PHP and Apache. The first tool is php, which is an essential tool in creating a web-based application, and the second tool, is apache, which is the basic and common tool in creating a web-based application. PHP is an essential tool in creating a web-based application, since it allows you to perform some of the procedures involved in creating a web-based application, such as connecting to a database server, handling forms, implementing a search engine, the creation of images and other graphics, etc.

The php toolkit is installed to the php directory. PHP uses the Apache toolkit to handle web-based applications. The Apache toolkit is an essential part of PHP, since without it, you cannot use any of the PHP functions and procedures. In linux the php toolkit is located in the php directory. Create a web server PHP has an interface called CGI. When you install the php toolkit, it installs a CGI interface. The cgi interface gives you some tools, such as, a HTTP server and a HTTP executor. A HTTP server is a tool that can send web-based applications to the visitors of the website. A HTTP executor is a tool that is used to automatically evaluate CGI forms, it checks to see that a visitor's request is based on a form, and then, using the PHP code that you assigned to a form's action attribute, it sends the web-based application to the visitor. The PHP CGI interface
